Harrison was born in England in 1930. She was a talented writer and photographer, and she had a passion for adventure. In 1958, she decided to travel to Borneo to experience the jungle and meet the people who lived there.

Harrison's journey began in the town of Sibul, on the coast of Sarawak. She hired a boat and a crew, and set off down the Rejang River. The river was wide and fast-flowing, and the jungle along its banks was thick and forbidding.

Harrison's boat journey was not without its dangers. The river was full of rapids, and the jungle was home to crocodiles, snakes, and other dangerous animals. But Harrison was undeterred. She pressed on, determined to reach the source of the river.

After several weeks of travel, Harrison reached the source of the Rejang River. She was the first European woman to ever complete the journey. Harrison's journey was a major accomplishment, and it helped to open up the interior of Borneo to exploration.

In her book, "White Rajahs of Sarawak," Harrison wrote about her experiences on the Rejang River. She described the beauty of the jungle, the dangers of the river, and the people she met along the way. Harrison's book is a fascinating account of a remarkable journey, and it remains a classic of travel literature.

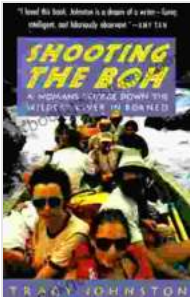

Barbara Harrison's journey down the Rejang River is a reminder of the power of human curiosity and determination. She was a brave and adventurous woman, and her journey is an inspiration to us all.
