The delegates debated many different ideas about how to structure the new government. They eventually agreed on a plan that created a strong central government with three branches: the legislative, executive, and judicial branches.

The Constitution was ratified by the states in 1788, and it went into effect in 1789. It has been amended 27 times since then, but its basic principles remain the same.

The Constitution is divided into seven articles. Each article deals with a different aspect of the government.

- Article I establishes the legislative branch of government, which is made up of the Senate and the House of Representatives.
- Article II establishes the executive branch of government, which is made up of the President, the Vice President, and the Cabinet.
- Article III establishes the judicial branch of government, which is made up of the Supreme Court and the lower federal courts.
- Article IV deals with the relationships between the states.
- Article V explains how the Constitution can be amended.
- Article VI establishes the supremacy of the Constitution over all other laws.
- Article VII explains how the Constitution was ratified.

The Constitution contains many important provisions that protect our individual rights. These provisions include:

- The Bill of Rights (Articles I-X) guarantees our basic freedoms, such as freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and the right to bear arms.
- The Equal Protection Clause (Article XIV) guarantees that all citizens are treated equally under the law.
- The Due Process Clause (Article V) protects our right to a fair trial.
- The Commerce Clause (Article I) gives the federal government the power to regulate commerce between the states.
- The Supremacy Clause (Article VI) establishes the Constitution as the supreme law of the land.

The Constitution is the foundation of our democracy. It protects our individual rights and freedoms, and it ensures that our government is accountable to the people.

The Constitution is also a living document. It has been amended over time to reflect the changing needs of our nation. As we continue to grow and change, so too will the Constitution.
